

Hello, my name is Mohammed and I was born in Bangladesh. I moved to America at the age of 7. I saw my father for the first time in 7 years and it was great. I started to speak fluent English within 2 years, which took an extreme amount of work. I never liked writing, which would explain my problem with grammar, but recently I started to read a lot of books and it has helped a lot with my grammar. I never took school seriously and I was a decent student throughout my life. Coming from a Brown family, decent is not enough. Which is why I hid my report card from my parents my entire junior and senior year of high school. I came to City College thinking that I was going to major in biology, but sitting in a bio class for one day was enough for me to change my mind. Now I am pursuing a degree in Computer Science. I want to do computer science because I love technology. My main goal is to become a Software Engineer. I try to learn how to code during school, but during my free time, I like going to the gym or play basketball with my friends. I also don't like listening to music because of the messages it conveys. My goal before graduating from college is to drive all around America and live in the woods for several days. I don't know why I want to do this, but I want to do it. If you read this entire thing I will buy you lunch, maybe.
